and an email disguised as a New Year greetings screensaver but which, after being opened, installed a remote access trojan. Researchers say it was likely a series of DDoS attacks. The second attack came just after North Korea's 5th missile test. In response to a Chinese government, the hack into the networks of service providers and companies was primarily an attempt to disrupt services. The hack came a day after the government issued a warning to bolster network security in anticipation of the 2022 National People's Congress. The hackers targeted email accounts. In response, authorities temporarily shut down the mailing system in the legislature. The group also targeted government websites and redirecting users to a website that provides information for Chinese expatriates. The Government claimed that the hackers sent threatening messages on their websites. One message stated "we are close to you where you do not think about it." The hackers also gained access to data on more than 500,000 people and disrupting their services around the world. Researchers discovered that the malware linked to Chinese state-sponsored groups. Many of the nations targeted are currently engaged in disputes with China.

July. This announcement came after Australian media outlets blamed Chinese government hackers for the attack. The hackers used the Log4j vulnerability to gain access to computer networks.
